FOR RENT Large brick stable stable. 1511 R. I. ave. no. Mr. Shaw Says He Really Saw A Sea Serpent.

Another chapter has been added to the rather fragmentary history of the great sea serpent. This time the story comes from the Jersey coast, and its sponsor is Mr. Willard P. Shaw, of 41 Wall street. Not only did Mr. Shaw have an excellent view of the monater, but his wife, their nine-year old son, and Miss Ella B. D. Salter, of Pat erson, who was visiting at the Shaw's cottage, at Spring Lake, also watched it bor, who was walking along the beach, observed the phenomenon, and his observa-tions tallied exactly with those of the Shaw As it is Mr. Shaw, who is sponsor for the story, it is worth while to take into con-sideration four points regarding him. First, he is temperate; second, he is not subject to hallucinations, third, his sight subject to hailucinations, third, his sight is excellent, and fourth, his veracity is unimpeachable. The same is true of the other observers. Mr. Shaw, who is a cawyer at 41 Wall street, and also president of the New York Balance Dock Company, lives in Paterson, and has a cottage at Spring Lake, N. J., just across the road from the tea beach. On Sunday afternoon he, Mrs. Shaw, Miss Salter, and young Williard Shaw were sitting on the front porch, which overlooks the sea, trying to keep cool. The afternoon was calm and hot, and the only motion of the water was a keep cool. The afternoon was calm and hot, and the only motion of the water was a long, quiet swell breaking monotonously on the beach. The conversation, which had been very desultory, and almost died away, and about half-past 1 Mrs. Shaw was considering the advisability of going up stairs for a nap, when Miss Salter, who had been looking intently out to sea toward the north, said:

"There's something strange out there in toward the north, said:

"There's something strange out there in the water, and it is coming this way."

Looking where the pointed, the others saw a black object projecting from the water, and about it a considerable commotion.

"Perhaps it's a school of porpoises." suggested Mrs. Shaw.

"Or a whale!" exclaimed the boy, ciapping his hands. "Oh, papa, do you suppose it's a whale?"

"It doesn't act like any whale I ever saw, and I've seen a good many," replied Mr. Shaw, shading his eyes with his hands; "and it certainly isn't porpoises. If I believed in such things, I should say it—well, bring out the big field glasses."

Running into the house, the boy quickly came out with a pair of very powerful field glasses. Boylike, he held them to his own eyes for a moment before giving them to his father, and, on getting the object in terms he existed out.

cently alleged to have been seen in Lo island Sound. It made no noise, but it water was greatly stirred up by its mowater was greatly stirred up by its move-ments. Progress was made by a series of writhing movements, not sidewise, but up and down. Its speed was estimated as being at least forty miles an hour. At times nearly all the body could be seen as the huge serpent contorted itself, and again only the head was out of water.

"Evidently the scrpent had some definite objective point in view," said Mr. Shaw in searning it. "for it never paused or turned from its course, but kept pointing south, skirting the coast at a distance of hair a mile out. A little further in and it would have struck the nets, and then there would have been a line commotion, I suppose. Luckily the creature kept to the deeper water. I think if it had turned toward the shore I should have been inclined to collect the family and run for the woods. It was in sight for not more than seven minutes.

even minutes.
"When Miss Salter first saw the serpent it "When Miss Salter first saw the serpent it was more than two miles down the shore, and altogether we must have seen it cover considerably more than five miles. I should say that forty miles as hour was a moderate estimate of the speed. In describing our strange visitor generally I should say that it looked like an enormous smooth-skinnedserpent, with analligator-like head."

After the monster had vanished from sight, its uplifted head being the last thing seen, the spectators wentback to the porch to talk it over. In comparing observations they found that all their estimates agreed. While they were talking, a neighbor who owns a cottage not far from Mr. Shaw's came up breathless and ingreat excitement.

"I've seen the sea serpent," he gasped,

"I've seen the sea serpent," he gasped, when he reached the porch. "I was walking along the beach and saw it as plain as I see you now, swimming south faster than any steamer that ever floated, out beyond the fish poles. Didn't any of you see it?"

They assured him that they had all seen it, and asked for his description of it, which he gave. It tallied with theirs exactly. Beore he went away he said to Mr. Shaw: "I hope you'll make this thing public. It is too wonderful to keep quiet about. I'll go at any time and take oath to what I have

In his excitement, the neighbor went away without giving Mr. Shaw his name, but he can be found easily at any time. The question of the expediency of making public their adventure was discussed by the Shaws. Mr. Shaw was very doubtful about what he should do.

"A great many people will think that you are romancing," said his wife, "and many others will make fun of you or think you are trying to make fun of them. Nevertheless, as there isn't any reasonable doubt that it was the sea screent we saw, I think, as a matter of scientific interest; you ought to give out the facts."

I think, as a matter of scientific interest, you ought to give out the facts."

"Let people guy if they want to," decided Mr. Shaw. "I know what I've seen, and I'm not going to be afraid to tell about it. I guess my reputation is strong enough to carry a sea serpent."

So Mr. Shaw sent word to the Sun yesterday, and a Sun reporter called on him at his office. At the time one of Mr. Shaw's partners was endeavoring to chaff him about the matter, but he stuck to the facts and insisted on the reality of the scrpent.

"It isn't a fake or a joke, or anything but the plain, bare, usembellished truth," said he to the reporter. "I'm not a man who has time to make up lies and take trouble. this, that I, a plain man of business, with no hotels to advertise by getting a sea ser-pent to cavort around in front of them, have seen a creature of which I had hith-erto doubted the existence. I believe that no man has any right to conceal data on a-subject so interesting scientifically and subject so interesting scientifically and so little known.

"Unfortunately for the sake of abundance of evidence that might have been adduced." continued Mr. Shaw, "the hotels down at Spring Lake are closed and the place is practically deserted. The excursion season is over, too, and while a month earlier there might have been a dozen steamboots in sight, there wasn't one anywhere near on Sunday. I did make not a sail to the south however, and I am one anywhere near on Sunday. I did make out a sail to the south, however, and I am in hopes that some vessels there may get to sight of the monster. If it kept on as near to the coast as it was when it went out of range of our vision I should think that it would be seen somewhere from the land further down. I and my family are naturally deeply interested in the matter, and we shall study the papers for some further news of the serpent."

In conclusion Mr. Shaw said that he was willing to make affidavit in support of his statements.

Taking No Bisks.
Uncle Silas, from Upcreek, put his head inside of the door of an elevator pertaining to a down-town office building and cautiously asked the boy in charge:
"Cost anything to fide up?"
"No," said the boy.
"Charge a feller fur ridin' down after he's gone up?"
"No."

"No."
"Den't have no trick of puttin' a man off at the nineteenth floor an' making him walk down?"
"No."
"Ain't no gouge about it, noway?"
"None."
"Sure?"
"Bure."
"Den't make no difference how high a feller goos?" feller goes?"
"Not a bit."

"Then take me clear up," said Uncle Silas, stepping inside.—Chicago Daily Tribune.
